The following is a copy of a letter from the committee of merchants in London, addreffed to DANIEL DULANY, Efq; and the merchants in the province of Maryland.

London, Feb. 28, 1766.

GENTLEMEN,

AFTER much anxiety, we have at length the pleafure to acquaint you, that a bill is now in the houfe of commons for repealing the ftamp-act; it was read a fecond time yefterday.—We alfo look forward to fome beneficial regulations, and extenfion of the trade of America; which we hope may be obtained in the courfe of this feffion of parliament; during which the moft ferious attention and application fhall take place on our part, to every point which may tend to the general good.

Permit us now, gentlemen, to lay before you, our fentiments on the prefent ftate of affairs, to fubmit them to your good judgment, and to requeft, that, fo far as they agree with it, you will be pleafed to inculcate the propriety of the conduct we recommend.

It has been a conftant argument againft the repeal, that in cafe it fhould take place, the parliamentary vote of right will be waft paper, and that the colonies will underftand very well, that what is pretended to be adopted, on mere commercial principles of expedience, is really yielding through fear, and amounts to a tacit but effectual furrender of its rights; or, at leaft, a tacit compact that it will never ufe it.

In this line of argument, every debate, and every queftion, from oppofition, has run: How material, how neceffary, therefore, is it, that the event fhould not fupport, or even feem to fupport, thofe arguments?

The event will juftify thofe arguments in the ftrongeft manner, if the colonies fhould triumph on the repeal, and affect to feize the yielding of parliament, as a point gained over parliamentary authority. The oppofition (from whom the colonies have fuffered fo much) would then throw in the teeth of our friends, fee your work,—it is as we faid,—it is but too well proved what ufe the colonies make of your weak and timid meafures.—On the contrary, if duty, fubmiffion, and gratitude, be the returns made by the colonies, then, our friends may exult, they may fay, we are in the right,—Is it not as we faid? fee the colonies regained to this country by our moderation,—regained by their loyalty, their affection, and their trade.

It is needlefs to fay, how extremely preferable the latter fuppofition is to the firft, how much more defirable for this country, and for the colonies.

You muft be fenfible what friends the colonies have had in the prefent miniftry, and are doubtlefs informed what pains they have taken to ferve them.—It is juftice likewife to them, to inform you, that they have had great difficulties to encounter in the caufe, the principal of which was unhappily thrown in by the colonies themfelves, we mean the intemperate proceedings of various ranks of people on your fide the water; and the difficulties of the repeal would have been much lefs, if they had not by their violence in word and action, awakened the honour of parliament; and thereby involved every friend of the repeal in the imputation of betraying the dignity of parliament. This is fo true, that the act could certainly not have been repealed, had not men's minds been in fome meafure fatisfied with the declaration of right: If therefore you would make the proper returns to your country; if you have a mind to do credit to your friends, and ftrengthen the hands of your advocates, haften, we befeech you, to expreſs filial duty and gratitude to your parent country. Then will thofe who have been (and while they have the power we doubt not will be) your friends, plume themfelves on the reftoration of peace to the colonies, union, trade, and reciprocal advantages to them, and to us. But if violent meafures are continued and triumphs on the point gained: If it is talked of as a victory? If it is faid the parliament have yielded up the right,—then indeed your enemies will have a compleat triumph, your friends muft certainly lofe all power to ſerve you,—your tax maſters probably be reſtored, and fuch a train of ill conſequences follow, as are eaſier for you to imagine, than for us to deſcribe,—at leaſt ſuch meaſures on your ſide, will greatly tend to produce theſe effects.—We have no doubt that you will adopt the contrary conduct, and inculcate it to the utmoſt of your influence, to which we ſincerely wiſh the moſt extenſive regard may be paid, and that uninterrupted mutual affection may continue between Great-Britain and her colonies to the lateſt ages.——We are with unfeigned regard,

GENTLEMEN,
Your affectionate friends,
and humble ſervants,

Mr. GREEN,

THE undue influence the preſs, in Virginia, has long laboured under, renders it unneceſſary to make any apology for conveying to the public, through the channel of your free paper, any thing from thence that breathes the ſpirit of liberty. By printing the following letter you will oblige one, if not more of your readers.

To the committee of MERCHANTS in LONDON.

Virginia, Potomack River, June 6, 1766.

GENTLEMEN,

THERE is a letter of yours, dated the 28th of February laſt, lately printed in the public papers here, which, tho' addreſſed to a particular ſet of men, ſeems intended for the colonies in general; and being upon a very intereſting ſubject, I ſhall, without further preface or apology, exerciſe the right of a freeman, in making ſuch remarks upon it as I think proper.

The epithets of parent and child, have been ſo long applied to Great Britain and her colonies, that individuals have adopted them, and we can hardly ſee any thing from your ſide of the water free from the authoritative ſtile of maſter to a ſchool boy.

'We have, with infinite difficulty and fatigue, got you excuſed this one time; pray be a good boy for the future; do what your papa and mama bid you, and haſten to return them your moſt grateful acknowledgments for condeſcending to let you keep what is your own; and then all your acquaintance will love you, and praiſe you, and give you pretty things; and if you ſhould, at any time hereafter, happen to tranſgreſs, your friends will all beg for you, & be ſecurity for your good behaviour; but if you are a naughty boy, and turn obſtinate, and do not mind what your papa and mama ſay to you, but preſume to think their commands (let them be what they will) unjuſt or unreaſonable, or even ſeem to aſcribe their preſent indulgence to any other motive than exceſs of moderation and tenderneſs, and pretend to judge for yourſelves, when you are not arrived at the years of diſcretion, nor capable of diſtinguiſhing between good and evil; then every body will hate you, and ſay you are a graceleſs and undutiful child; your parents and maſters will be obliged to whip you ſeverely, and your friends will be aſhamed to ſay any thing in your excuſe: Nay, they will be blamed for your faults.—See your work—ſee what you have brought the child to—If he had been well ſcourged at firſt, for oppoſing our will and pleaſure, and daring to think he had any ſuch thing as property of his own, he would not have had the impudence to repeat the crime.——

'My dear child, we have laid the alternative fairly before you; you cannot heſitate in the choice; and we doubt not you will obſerve ſuch a conduct as your friends recommend.'

Is not this a little ridiculous, when applied to three or four millions of as loyal and uſeful ſubjects as any in the Britiſh dominions, who have been only contending for their birth right, and have now only gained, or rather kept, what could not with common juſtice, or even policy, be denied them? But ſetting aſide the manner, let me ſeriouſly conſider the ſubſtance and ſubject of your letter.

Can the honour of parliament be maintained by perſiſting in a meaſure evidently wrong? Is it any reflection upon the honour of parliament to prove itſelf wiſer this year than the laſt; to have profited by experience, and to correct an error which time and undeniable evidence have pointed out?

If the vote of right had aſſerted any unjuſt, oppreſſive, or unconſtitutional principles, to become "waſte paper," would be the moſt innocent uſe that could be made of it; by the copies we have ſeen here, the legiſlative authority of Great Britain is aſſerted in general terms; but a juſt and proper diſtinction between legiſlation and taxation has been made by the greateſt and wiſeſt men in the nation; ſo that if the right to the latter had been diſclaimed, it would not have impeached or weakened the vote of right; on the contrary it would have ſtrengthened it; for nothing except the hanging of the author of the S—p A—t would have contributed more to reſtore that confidence which a weak or corrupt m—y had ſo greatly impaired.

We do not deny the ſupreme authority of Great-Britain over her colonies; but it is a power which a wiſe legiſlature will exerciſe with extreme tenderneſs and caution, and carefully avoid the leaſt imputation or ſuſpicion of partiality. Would to God that this always may be the caſe!

To make an odious diſtinction between us and our fellow-ſubjects reſiding in Great-Britain, by depriving us of the ancient trial by juries of our equals, and ſubſtituting in its place an arbitrary civil law court, to put it in the power of every ſycophant and informer ('the moſt miſchievous, wicked, abandoned, and profligate race' ſays an eminent writer upon Engliſh politics 'that ever God permitted 'to plague mankind') to drag a Britiſh ſubject a thouſand miles from his own country (whereby he may be deprived of all benefit of evidence) to diſpute a matter of property before a judge, who from the nature of his office is a creature of the miniſtry, liable to be diſplaced at their pleaſure, whoſe intereſt it is to encourage informers, as his income may in a great meaſure depend upon his condemnations; and to give ſuch a judge a power of excluding the moſt innocent man ſo treated, from any remedy (even the recovery of his coſts) by only certifying that in his opinion there was a probable cauſe of complaint; and thus to make the property of the ſubject, in a matter which may reduce him from opulence to indigence, depend upon a word before unknown in the language and ſtile of laws!—Are theſe among the inſtances that call for our expreſſion of filial gratitude to our parent country? Theſe things did not depend altogether upon the ſtamp act, and therefore are not repealed with it.

Can the foundation of the ſtate be ſapped, and the body of the people remain unaffected? Are the inhabitants of Great Britain abſolutely certain, that in the miniſtry or parliament of a future day, ſuch encroachments will not be urged as precedents againſt themſelves? Too late may their children have cauſe to lament the loſs of theſe barriers which they have now ſo lightly broken down!

Is the indulgence of Great-Britain manifeſted, by prohibiting her colonies from exporting to foreign countries ſuch commodities as ſhe does not want, and will not purchaſe; and from importing ſuch as ſhe does not produce nor manufacture, and therefore cannot furniſh upon terms at which we can afford to buy?—One of your own writers (I think it is Biſhop Burnett) relates a remarkable piece of tyranny of the prieſthood in Italy. —'They make it 'an article of religion, ſays he, for the people to 'mix water with their wine in the preſs, by which 'it is ſoured; ſo that the laity cannot drink a drop 'of good wine, unleſs they will buy it of the con'vents, at whatever price the clergy think fit to ſet 'upon it.'—I forbear to make the application.

Let our fellow ſubjects in Great Britain reflect, that we are deſcended from the ſame ſtock with themſelves, nurtured in the ſame principles of freedom, which we have both ſucked in with our mother's milk; that in croſſing the Atlantic ocean, we have only changed our climate, not our minds; our natures and diſpoſitions remain unaltered; that we are ſtill the ſame people in every reſpect, only not yet debauched by wealth, luxury, venality, and corruption, and then they will be able to judge how the the late regulations have been reliſhed in America.

You need not, Gentlemen, be afraid of our breaking out into intemperate ſtrains of triumph and exultation; there is as yet no cauſe that our joy ſhould exceed the bounds of moderation.

If we are ever ſo unfortunate to be made ſlaves, (which God avert!) what matter is it to us, whether our chains are forged in London, or at Conſtantinople? Whether the oppreſſions come from a B—h P—t, or a Turkiſh Divan.

You tell us, our tax maſters will probably reſtored, do you mean the ſtamp officers, or the ſtamp M—y? If the firſt, the treatment they have already found here, will hardly make them fond of returning.—If the latter we deſpiſe them too much to fear them,—they have ſufficiently expoſed their own ignorance, malice, and impotence—the cloven-foot has been too plainly ſeen, to be again concealed—they have rendered themſelves as obnoxious to Great-Britain as to America.

If the late miniſtry's party could have influenced the legiſlature to have made ſo cruel and dangerous an experiment as attempting to inforce the ſtamp act by a military power; would the nation have engaged heartily in ſuch an execrable cauſe? Would there have been no difficulty in raiſing and tranſporting a body of troops, ſufficient to occupy a continent of more than two thouſand miles in extent? Would they have no dangers to encounter in the woods and wilds of America? Three or four millions of people driven to deſperation, are not an object of contempt.—America, though weak in herſelf, adds greatly to the ſtrength and power of Great Britain; which would be diminiſhed in proportion by her loſs: With prudent management ſhe may become an impenetrable bulwark to the Britiſh nation, and almoſt enable it to ſtand before the ſtroke of time.

Say there was no poſſibility of failing in the project; what then would have been the conſequence? Could you have deſtroyed us without ruining yourſelves? The trade of Great Britain is carried on and ſupported principally by credit.—If the American merchant has an hundred thouſand pounds due to him in the colonies, he muſt owe near as much to his woollen-draper, his linen-draper, his grocer, &c. and theſe again are indebted to the manufacturer, and ſo on; there is no determinate end to this commercial chain; break but one link of it, and the whole is deſtroyed—make a bankrupt of the merchant, by ſtopping his remittances from America, and you ſtrike at the credit of every man that has connections with him; there is no knowing where the contagion would ſtop.—You would overturn one another like a ſet of nine-pins.—The value of your lands and produce would immediately fall, your manufacturers would be ſtarved for want of employment, your funds might fail, your public credit ſink,—and let but the bubble once burſt, where is the man that could undertake to blow it up again?

Theſe evils are for the preſent removed.—Praiſed be Almighty God—Bleſſed be our moſt gracious ſovereign—thanks to the preſent mild and prudent temper of parliament—Thanks to the wiſe and honeſt conduct of the preſent adminiſtration—Thanks to the unwearied diligence of our friends the Britiſh merchants; thanks to that happy circumſtance of their private intereſt being ſo interwoven with ours, that they could not be ſeparated—Thanks too to the ſpirited and diſintereſted conduct of our merchants in the Northern colonies, who deſerve to have their names handed down with reverence and gratitude to poſterity.—Thanks to the unanimity of the colonies themſelves.—And many thanks to our generous and able benefactor, Mr. Pitt, who always ſtood forth a champion in the cauſe of liberty, and of his country.—

No thanks to Mr. G——; who, without his genius or abilities has dared to act the part that Pericles did, when he engaged his country in the Peloponneſian war, which, after a long and dreadful ſcene of blood, ended in the ruin of all Greece, and fitted it for the Macedonian yoke.

Some bungler in politics will ſoon, perhaps, be framing ſchemes for reſtraining our manufactures.—Vain attempt!—Our land is cheap and fertile, we have more of it than we are able to employ; while we can live in eaſe and plenty, tillage and not arts will engage our attention; if by opening the channels of trade, you afford us a ready market for the produce of our lands, and an opportunity of purchaſing cheap the conveniences of life, all our ſuperfluous gain will ſink into your pockets, in return for Britiſh manufactures. If the trade from this continent with the French and Spaniards, in their ſugar iſlands, had not been reſtrained, Great Britain would ſoon have underſold them, with their own produce, in every market of the world. Until you lay us under a neceſſity of ſhifting for ourſelves, you need not be afraid of the manufactures of America.—The ancient poets, in their elegant manner of expreſſion, have made a kind of being of neceſſity, and tell us that the Gods themſelves are obliged to yield to her.

It is by indulgence and invitations, not by compulſion, that the market for Britiſh manufactures is to be kept up and increaſed in America; without the firſt, you will find the latter as ineffectual as deſtructive of the end it aims at, as perſecution in matters of religion, which ſerves not to extinguiſh, but to confirm the hereſy.—There is a paſſion natural to the mind of man, eſpecially a free man, which makes him impatient of reſtraint.

Can you, does any ſenſible man, think, that three or four millions of people, not naturally defective in genius or in courage, who have taſted the ſweets of liberty, in a country that doubles its inhabitants every twenty years, in a country ſo extended as the Britiſh empire in America, a country abounding in ſuch variety of ſoil and climates, capable of producing not only the neceſſaries, but the conveniences and delicacies of life, will long ſubmit to oppreſſion; if, unhappily for yourſelves, oppreſſion ſhould be offered them?

Do you think, that all your rival powers in Europe would ſit ſtill, and ſee you cruſh your once flouriſhing and thriving colonies, unconcerned ſpectators of ſuch a quarrel.—Recollect what happened in the Low-Countries a century or two ago—Call to mind the cauſe of the revolt—Call to mind too the part that England herſelf acted—The ſame cauſes will generally produce the ſame effects; and it requires no great degree of penetration to foretell, that what has happened may happen again.

God forbid there ſhould be occaſion, and grant that the union, liberty, & mutual happineſs of Great Britain and her colonies, may continue uninterrupted to the lateſt ages.

America has always acknowledged her dependance upon Great Britain—It is her intereſt, it is her inclination, to depend upon Great-Britain—We readily own, that theſe colonies were firſt ſettled, not at the expence, but under the protection, of the Engliſh government, which protection it has continued to afford them; and we own too that protection and obedience are reciprocal duties.—If it is aſked, at whoſe expence they were ſettled? The anſwer is obvious—At the expence of the private adventurers, our anceſtors; the fruits of whoſe toil and danger we now enjoy.—We claim nothing but the liberty and privileges of Engliſhmen, in the ſame degree as if we had ſtill remained among our brethren in Great Britain: theſe rights have not been forfeited by any act of ours, we cannot be deprived of them without our conſent, but by violence and injuſtice, we have received them from our fore-fathers, and with God's leave we will tranſmit them unviolated to our poſterity.

Can thoſe who have hitherto acted as our friends endeavour now inſidiouſly to draw from us conceſſions deſtructive to what we hold far dearer than life!

——If I could find example
Of thouſands, that by baſe ſubmiſſion had
Preſerv'd their freedom, I'd not do't: but ſince
Nor braſs, nor ſtone, nor parchment bears not one,
Let cowardice itſelf forſwear it.

Our laws, our language, our principles of government, our intermarriages and other connections, our conſtant intercourſe, and above all our intereſt, are ſo many bands that hold us to Great Britain; not to be broken but by tyranny and oppreſſion.

Strange that among the late M—ry, there ſhould not be found a man of common ſenſe and common honeſty, to improve and ſtrengthen theſe natural ties by a mild and juſt government, inſtead of weakening and almoſt diſſolving them by Partiality and Injuſtice!—But I will not open the wounds which have been ſo lately bound up, and which ſtill require a ſkilful and a gentle hand to heal them.

Theſe are the ſentiments of a man, who ſpends moſt of his time in retirement; and has ſeldom meddled in public affairs, who enjoys a moderate but independent fortune, and, content with the bleſſings of a private ſtation, equally diſregards the ſmiles and frowns of the Great; who, though not born within the verge of the Britiſh iſle, is an Engliſhman in his principles, a zealous aſſertor of the act of ſettlement, firmly attached to the royal family upon the Throne, unalienably affected to his Majeſty's ſacred perſon and government; in the defence of which he would ſhed the laſt drop of his blood; who looks upon Jacobitiſm as the moſt abſurd infatuation, the wildeſt chimera that ever entered into the head of man; who adores the wiſdom and happineſs of the Britiſh conſtitution, and if he had his election now to make, would prefer it to any that does or ever did exiſt: I am not ſingular in this my political creed; theſe are the general principles of his Majeſty's ſubjects in America, they are the principles of more than nine tenths of the people, who have been ſo baſely miſrepreſented to you, and whom you would lately have treated as Rebels and out-laws. A people, to whom you can never grant too much; becauſe you can hardly give them any thing, which will not redound to the benefit of the giver.

If any perſon ſhould think it worth his while to animadvert upon what I have written, I ſhall make no reply. I have neither abilities nor inclination to turn author.

If the maxims I have aſſerted, are in themſelves juſt, they will need no vindication; if they are erroneous, I ſhall eſteem it a favour to have my errors pointed out, and will in modeſt ſilence, kiſs the rod that corrects me.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obliged humble ſervant,
A VIRGINIA PLANTER.

It was afterwards propoſed, to leave out the word repeal, and inſert explain and amend.

The queſtion was put, whether the word repeal ſhould remain.

CATO.

SIR,

YOURS, and all the colonies are about committing the greatest mistake that ever a people did.—You idolize a man whom you do not know, I mean the late Pitt; stop your hasty resolutions till you are better informed: You adore the speech he made last winter; he also said that you should not make so much as a nail or horse shoe, for I heard him: I have heard him call Hanover, justly, a petty barren electorate, and said that no more British blood or treasure should be wasted there: but soon after he sent all our army thither, and spent sixty millions sterling, for which he has mortgaged this unhappy kingdom to all Europe, and thereby has undone this nation.

He has become a pensioner of £. 3000 a year, and secured it for his wife's and son's life, and to her a peerage; he has availed himself of a madman's will of £. 3000 a year more, to the ruin of the lawful heir: and now you will be astonished to hear that he has turned his back on the nation by quitting the commons, and is created earl Chatham, at this extraordinary step the nation is amazed, and justly detests and abhors him. Thus the favourite triumphs, and may justly be said to drag him at his chariot wheel, and after this will your assembly persist in their precipitate vote, to erect a statue to a man who has given up his honour, and is despised. Surely they will retract it. I know some great and good men here desire they should.

Statues are erected only for princes, and when they are it should be only to the good and great, and not till they are dead; for the meaning of a statue is to preserve their memory when the original is gone, nor ought they to be erected till then, not knowing the part a man may act whilst living.

The great king William, the deliverer and saviour of this country has not his statue in this vast city, nor in the kingdom that I know of, and will you erect one of the Earl of Chatham, surely you are not in earnest: This country has had a Sidney, Hamden, Marlborough, Lock, Newton, &c. many of the greatest men in the world; but there is not a statue erected in public to any one of them, nor, in short, to any other subject in this kingdom: And will you act contrary to the sense, not only of this, but of all the nations of Europe! Beside it would be an insult to the king. Statues, Sir, are dangerous things, they impress the people's minds with slavery, and therefore we have in public but three in England, that of Charles I. of George I. and II.

The greatest honours bestowed on philosophers, heroes, generals, orators, in Europe, is to place their bust in a church or town hall.

By your publishing this, I think, you will do your country a real service, I am sure I meant it such, when I wrote it.

Yours,

A FRIEND OF AMERICA.

[ "Alias,
a d—n'd JACOBITICAL Rascal." ]

One of the Gentlemen, of the COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE having favoured us with an extract of a letter to Charles Garth, Esq; agent for this province, in Great-Britain, dated the 20th ult. the publication of it may serve to shew, that the sentiments of the Americans with regard to the Earl of Chatham are not altered, and therefore, as a proper answer to the foregoing it is here presented to our readers.

"—THAT letter concerning the STATUE, voted for the late Mr. PITT, (now Lord Chatham) was taken immediately into consideration, being the first business entered upon at this meeting. It was then determined by the house, to have it fixed in the most public part of our town, where two of the broadest and longest of our streets, that run east and west, and north and south, intersect each other at right angles, one of which is sixty the other seventy feet wide, and both as straight as an arrow: In the cross-way of these two streets, the statue is proposed to be placed, and will have our new church, our new market, the state-house, and armory (all public buildings) at the several corners next to it.

Mr. Wilton's form designed for an open place is thought rather too stiff in its attitude; however, we have no additional directions to give on this matter, farther than, that you will consult the best connoisseurs, and have it finished in the most elegant manner, excepting that too great care cannot be taken, to have the marble as hard, solid, and smoothly polished as possible, because of the many, sudden & violent showers of rain that happen here in the summer time, and those frequently immediately followed by such piercing and intense heat of the sun, as would (without such precaution) quickly penetrate into any cracks and less solid parts, and moulder them away, and thereby soon spoil the beauty of the statue. The other matters in your several letters will be answered with all expedition: THIS the house could not think of deferring a moment, especially at the present nice juncture, when such ingenuous and indefatigable pains are taking, on your side the water, in volumes of news papers and pamphlets, to vilify and bespatter Lord Chatham, and misrepresent his patriotic actions and intentions, in order, if possible, to deprive him of that popularity he hath so justly acquired, and thereby lessen his influence in public matters; but these attempts we think too violent and barefaced, as well as their design too apparent, to impose upon any sincere lovers of their country, and that free constitution he has so often and nobly defended, and therefore cannot but be treated by them with the greatest contempt.

For our parts, we must heartily congratulate the nation in general, on this great man's being placed once again so near his majesty, are sincerely rejoyced at the honours conferred upon him, and do not harbour any ungenerous distrust, or the most distant doubt, that the present lord Chatham will be less forward and zealous, to serve his country and its true interests, to his utmost power and abilities, than was the late truly great commoner, Mr. Pitt."

It has been lately reported in the Cherokees Country, that the Chickasaws have joined the Choctaws in their war against the Creeks, and surprised and destroyed three of their Upper Towns with all the inhabitants: But this report, at present, seems to want confirmation.

Tuesday last returned from the Northward, in the Brigt. Philadelphia Packet, Capt. John Harrison, Samuel Brailsford, Esq; Mrs. Brailsford, Adam Daniel, Esq; Capt. John Scott, Mr. John Scott jun. Mr. Maurice Jones, and several other passengers.

On Wednesday also returned here, in the Snow Penn, Capt. John Harkins, from New-Jersey, the right hon. Charles Lord Hope, accompanied by the hon. Capt. Mark Napier, who embarked again on Friday, for Philadelphia, to go to Virginia. Lord Hope intends, we hear, to spend the winter here.

Friday morning last, the hon. Martin Howard, Esq; chief justice of North Carolina, set out, by land, for that province.

That night died, aged 70 years, William Elliott, Esq; as hearty a man as most of 40 years of age, and a native of this province.

We hear from Port-Royal, that on Saturday last, Benjamin Guerard, Esq; (one of the representatives in the present general assembly, of the parish of St. Michael, Charles-Town) was married there, to Miss Sally Middleton, a most amiable and accomplished young lady, daughter of Thomas Middleton, Esq; who commanded the provincial regiment, in the expedition against the Cherokees, conducted by Col. Grant, in the year 1761.

This morning died, Capt. Silas Miles, of St. Paul's parish.
